

Toward a Consistent Ethic of Life

PROTECTING HUMAN LIFE AND CARING FOR CREATION

VIRTUAL WEBINAR

Since Cardinal Joseph Bernardin introduced the concept in the 1980s, Catholics in the United States have been discerning optimal ways to promote a consistent ethic of life. Most recently, Pope Francis has highlighted care for the natural environment — an urgent concern that complements the existing priorities regarding the protection of human dignity at every stage of life. Fr. Thomas Massaro, SJ, professor of moral theology at Fordham University, joins us as we together explore the full range of public issues that appeal to the consciences of Catholics today.

Thomas Massaro, SJ, is Professor of Moral Theology at Fordham University. A Jesuit priest of the United States East Province, he served as professor of moral theology at Weston Jesuit School of Theology in Cambridge, Massachusetts, at Boston College, and at Jesuit School of Theology of Santa Clara University, where he also served as Dean.
